Diary entries from March 1660 Thursday 1 March 1659 60 In the morning went to my Lord's lodgings, thinking to have spoke with Mr. Sheply , having not been to visit him since my coming to town.

Monday 26 March 1666 (The Diary of Samuel Pepys)

Monday 26 March 1666 Up, and a meeting extraordinary there was of Sir W. Coventry, Lord Bruncker, and myself, about the business of settling the ticket office, where infinite room is left for abusing the King in the wages of seamen.

Wednesday 28 March 1666 (The Diary of Samuel Pepys)

Wednesday 28 March 1666 Up, and with Creed, who come hither betimes to speake with me about his accounts, to White Hall by water, mighty merry in discourse, though I had been very little troubled with him, or did countenance it, having now, blessed be God! a great deale of good business to mind to better purpose than chatting with him.

Thursday 1 March 1665 66 (The Diary of Samuel Pepys)

Thursday 1 March 1665 66 Up, and to the office and there all the morning sitting and at noon to dinner with my Lord Bruncker, Sir W. Batten and Sir W. Pen at the White Horse in Lumbard Streete, where, God forgive us! good sport with Captain Cocke's having his mayde sicke of the plague a day or two ago and sent to the pest house, where she now ...

Friday 9 March 1665 66 (The Diary of Samuel Pepys)

Friday 9 March 1665 66 Up, and being ready, to the Cockpitt to make a visit to the Duke of Albemarle, and to my great joy find him the same man to me that [he has been] heretofore, which I was in great doubt of, through my negligence in not visiting of him a great while; and having now set all to rights there, I am in mighty ease in my mind ...

Friday 2 March 1665 66 (The Diary of Samuel Pepys)

Friday 2 March 1665 66 Up, as I have of late resolved before 7 in the morning and to the office, where all the morning, among other things setting my wife and Mercer with much pleasure to worke upon the ruling of some paper for the making of books for pursers, which will require a great deale of worke and they will earn a good deale of money by ...
